EMA VELLA, 15 YEAR OLD
A Maltese Star Is Born:
‘Raw Diamond’
Stuns X Factor Judges
By Tim Diacono

What an audition! X Factor Malta was set up to uncover hidden singing gems across the island and it certainly did just tonight, with 15-year-old Ema Vella absolutely astounding the judges. Born to Ethiopian parents but adopted by an old, Ema stepped onto the stage to smiles from the judges and comments about how sweet her face is. And their smiles soon turned to gasps of wonder as Ema belted out a powerful rendition of Etta James’ soul classic ‘I’d Rather Go Blind’ which belied her young years. Mesmerised, the judges gave her a round of applause and took it in turns to shower her with praise. “You’ve got such maturity for such a young girl, what a big voice... Oh my gosh,” Alex Alden said. “I think you were born to sing, you were born that way,” Ray Mercieca added. “You have a very special gift which we call the X Factor. You have the X Factor, sweetheart. You’re going to have a wonderful future.” “You’re a raw diamond and this is the first time I’m using this phrase,” Ira Losco said. “The way I see it, a raw diamond is someone with all the ingredients inside them who has yet to combine them all together to become explosive.” Howard Keith Debono then thanked Ema’s parents for adopting her and hailed them as an example to other families. “If it wasn’t for them, you wouldn’t be here today and perhaps you wouldn’t have the life you have today, and we wouldn’t have discovered what we discovered today,” he said. The judge was so impressed that he actually invited Ema’s mother and uncle (her father was abroad on work business) onto the stage so he could shake their hands and so that they could listen to the final verdict. All four judges voted her through to the next stage of the competition, with Howard describing his vote as his easiest yes of the day and Ray going a step further and claiming it was “probably the best yes I’m ever going to say”. It’s early days yet but, with the first round of the second season of X Factor Malta now complete, it’s fair to say that Ema will be one to watch out for. MALTA AND SINGAPORE AGREE TO COOPERATE ON EMERGING TECHNOLOGIES AND CYBERSECURITY

Minister Carmelo Abela remarked that the Maltese economy offers international entrepreneurs and stakeholders a myriad of opportunities

Malta and Singapore have signed a Memorandum of Understanding for cooperation in the field of emerging technologies and cybersecurity at the 2019 Singapore-Malta Business Forum.

The MoU was signed by Parliamentary Secretary Silvio Schembri on behalf of Malta, and Senior Minister of State at the Ministry of Transport and the Ministry of Communications and Information, Janil Puthucheary, on behalf of Singapore, in the presence of Minister Carmelo Abela.

Minister Carmelo Abela remarked that the Maltese economy offers international entrepreneurs and stakeholders a myriad of opportunities including, following recent developments, in the blockchain and distributed ledger technologies sector. He said that the longstanding ties between Malta and Singapore had grown from strength to strength since the establishment of diplomatic relations in 1988.

"Malta and Singapore may be geographically distant, but we are united by our similarities," he said. "We are both island states with small domestic markets and an important export sector. Being a strategic regional gateway, Malta can be used as a platform to European and North African markets. On the other hand, Singapore is increasingly assuming the role of a strategic gateway to Asia and Australasia."

"Moreover, we are both former British colonies, and both members of the Commonwealth of Nations and of the Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM). All this shows there is ample scope for further cooperation between our two countries. Areas of mutual interest such as trade, maritime affairs, and education are obvious, but we can explore and look beyond this too."

Trade Malta’s Chief Executive Officer, Anton Buttigieg, added that this was another significant step forward to further enhance the economic and commercial relationship between Singapore and Malta. “Singapore is an important Asian hub for financial services, maritime affairs, logistics, and the digital economy. The Business Forum and the B2B networking session have helped to continue strengthening Malta’s reputation as an ideal partner in Europe and in the Mediterranean.”
New Maltese ePassports to start being rolled SOON

Include highly sophisticated layer of security features

Amongst the new features introduced, the inner visa pages will depict intricate imagery of renowned Maltese landmarks, customs and traditions, which pay tribute to Malta’s rich history and cultural heritage. The images depicted include those of the Ċittadella in Gozo and the Manoel Theatre.

The encrypted imagery, combined with a highly sophisticated layer of security features, is printed in secure ink and was primarily designed for security reasons.

The new document will be issued to new applications or applications for the renewal of the said document, at no extra cost. Passports in circulation will remain fit for travel and valid until their expiry date. These already conformed to international security standards but the new ones would make use of the latest technology to further prevent document forgery.

Citizenship Parliamentary Secretary Julia Farrugia Portelli said the new ePassport will combine travel with culture. She said one’s personal details would be safely captured on a polycarbonate bio-data page, which would make it extremely difficult to forge or tamper with without leaving signs of attack.

Identity Malta’s chief executive officer Anton Sevasta said the first batch of diplomatic and alien passports was expected to come into circulation on the second week of November. Unless technical difficulties were encountered, the issuance of the ordinary passports would follow.

Dear Editor,

Like many other Maltese in Adelaide I would like to know who is representing us, the Maltese in South Australia, at the Council for Maltese Living Abroad? Is our representative aware of our achievements and/or serious problems? Who is speaking on our behalf? We have lost our Maltese Language School after more than 30 years of operation, the Maltese Radio Program on PBAfm and now we lost the only Maltese Chaplain, Fr Micallef and unfortunately he was not replaced. We hope that with the help of this journal we will be able to voice our needs and frustrations. I am afraid to say that in a few years time we will lose our remaining groups who are working so hard to preserve the culture of our homeland in our beautiful state of South Australia for future generations. What could be done? Alfred Camilleri (Aus)
I am one of very many who are profoundly disappointed with the repeatedly discriminatory behaviours of some SBS staff acting unilaterally against those they are supposed to represent. I do not think that SBS realises the magnitude of the Maltese Communities across Australia - 51 clubs, aged-care units, organisations, etc in NSW alone. Thousands rely on this excellent news broadcast to maintain contact with Malta. Communities much, much smaller than ours are getting far better coverage than we are. This constant misinterpretation of census data, the yardstick (and bane) of SBS programmers, to our constant disadvantage is blatantly ridiculous. I will start to draw up a proportional coverage by SBS compared to ethnic group representation in Australia. I feel that the time has come for the Council for Maltese Living Abroad, the Maltese Community Councils of each state, the Maltese Diplomatic Missions and our Maltese print and electronic media to take up the cudgels by alerting the SBS executive, the Australian Government, our MPs and the competing free-to-air channels that the Maltese community is no longer well served by the free-to-air services, which we pay for equally, currently being provided to the Maltese by SBS. At the very least, this may get some SBS decision-makers to understand the level of our distress, to understand the strength and size of our community in Australia, to revise our allocation of air-time and its prioritisation and to reverse this programming staff's discriminatory attitudes. Please feel free to advance my thoughts to SBS CE and Exec Management, Malta Public Broadcasting Service and the Malta High Commissioner. I am sure that, like myself, there are hundreds of Maltese-Australians who are very angry that our precious ethnic news should be replaced by basketball play-offs. Many of these Maltese-Australians are high profile and will take their own individual actions in response to this affront. Our Malta News is valuable to us. Maltese engagement on SBS is already grossly under-represented.

The tradition of Malta Day: 18 Maltese Embassy worldwide celebrate this country's achievements.

Over the years, the Maltese diplomatic missions around the world have developed a tradition in their respective host countries, a celebration which became known as “Malta Day”. The Malta Day, this was held in 18 mission abroad between the months of September and October. The Maltese missions abroad include Palestine, Geneva, Italy, Ireland, Spain, Tunisia, Israel, Republic of Turkey, UK, India, Beijing China, Washington DC, Australia, Poland, Strasbourg, the Netherlands, Moscow, Greece, Kuwait, New York. For this occasion Embassies invite important collaborating partners.

In the message of the occasion, through a video message, Minister Carmelo Abela said that this year’s theme is the commemoration of our country; what we have achieved so far and the direction you are addressing.

He spoke about Malta rewarding the values of democracy, the rule of law, freedom of expression, pluralism, inclusion, protection of human rights of the individual, and much more. He explained the success that Malta is gaining. He recalled how over recent years, Malta has distinguished itself and was at the forefront of embracing change and social and economic opportunities, rather than allowing its fate to be formed only by external factors.

“Like good sailors, we do not complain and resign ourselves when the wind changes direction; instead, we adjust our sails and forge ahead towards our destination. This is only possible because we truly believe in our own potential. The past twelve months have been, much like the twelve that preceded them, characterised by remarkable successes in several fields”. A country that had become used to regularly registering a deficit is now registering a surplus, which it is re-investing in future-proofing itself.

He went into the flow of foreign direct investment, as well as an increased externalisation of Malta-based enterprises. “We are creating an environment that allows emerging technologies to flourish and grow. Having cemented our reputation as the ‘Blockchain Island’, our ambition, now, is to create models which would allow Artificial Intelligence companies to use Malta as a springboard to go global. We are also looking into the exploration of the commercial aspect of outer space, as well as our ability to become a hub for video game development and eSports”, said Abela.

He made reference to the diplomatic front and remarked that Malta is poised to continue expanding its horizons, by strengthening already existing ties with other countries, while establishing new ones. He added that as a firm believer in multilateral cooperation, Malta will continue striving to encourage the identification of synergies, cooperation on matters of common interest, and the capitalisation on each other’s comparative advantage. “No matter what a country’s geographical size is, it is through our unity that change can truly be achieved”, said Abela.

He concluded by saying that Malta will continue to contribute fully to international efforts to face complex global challenges such as climate change, ocean health, and migration.

We invite all Maltese associations around the globe to advertise on THE MALTESE JOURNAL free of charge. Our aim to keep our communities connected. South Australian born singer Bonnie Lee Galea of Maltese Heritage, first left Australia in 1991 at age 25 to work on gambling ships as a croupier, in Singapore & Indonesia. A year and a half later she found herself swimming the waters of the Malacca Straits after her ship was hit and sunk in 1992. Returning to Adelaide all too soon & contemplating her next move she planned her escape in 1993 and ran away with the circus, to be one of 3 dancers, touring regional Victoria for Silver’s Grande Magic Circus. But soon again her Mediterranean gypsy blood enticed her to leave the circus behind and travel the countries of the world exploring various professions, cultures & arts.

HOW & WHERE THE MUSIC BEGAN - Bonnie has performed, managed & marketed her own bands professionally since 2000 throughout Northern Territory, Queensland & South Australia. With her Mediterranean background, this songstress has a vast repertoire extending from early classics to current contemporary numbers & occasionally her own compositions will keep you mesmerised with her translation of each song. Music was always a hidden desire for Bonnie, never missing an opportunity to be on stage to sing or dance for her own enjoyment but never realised it could one day become her everyday life. Once returning to Australia in 1998, Bonnie relocated from SA to Darwin, where she was surrounded by many brilliant musicians. By 1999, now 33, she made the move from being a professional croupier to being a professional singer and spent the next 10 years on stage, nurturing & developing her new found talent. A late bloomer compared to most other fabulous musicians Bonnie was lucky enough to be supported by great musicians from various well known Australian bands to enable her to bring to the stage her life travels, experience and Mediterranean passion, singing with her band Firewater and original band ‘Esh’!

During this time Bonnie had the opportunity of supporting James Morrison’s brother, John Morrison at the Darwin Casino’s ‘Jazz on the Lawns’ with her band Firewater, and also performed for charity organisations where the main act would be a great Australian Artist such as Glenn Shorrock & James Blundell. Bonnie also appeared in two or three different roles in the 2004 production of ‘Guys & Dolls’ presented by Kris Stewart at the Darwin Entertainment Centre.

Leaving Darwin in late 2007, Bonnie relocated to QLD where she spent three years gigging and honing her talents more towards the Blues & Jazz genre, alongside well respected, talented Qld musician friends. Performing up and down the East Coast of Australia in her newly named line up BONFIRE from a duo to 6pc band. Soon though her gypsy within decided it was time to return to her hometown.

SINCE RETURNING TO ADELAIDE - In 2010 Bonnie returned to Adelaide and by 2014 she was releasing her debut CD, began self-producing and co-producing shows with the guidance and Musical Direction of her partner Quinton Dunne & has collaborated with other wonderful SA artists.

Since 2014 Bonnie has developed four tour ready shows ranging from a 4pc, 5pc & two 6pc shows that can in some cases be larger too plus performs in a

In 2019 Blonde Bombshells of Jazz [tribute show] presented for the 2nd year in theatres and festivals and now with a launch of the CD for the show following up from her first CD ‘Since I Fell For You’ released in 2014 which includes a couple of foreign sung songs. Also released in early 2019 is her original song ‘That’s My Baby’ on a compilation CD ‘Women in Blues’ for Wayward Woman Blues Performing interstate & locally accompanied by some of the most talented local musicians from SA or in each state, on a huge variety of instruments including double bass, guitar, sax/flute, congas etc. Reviving memorable compositions in their own unique style, tailored to suit each individual demographic, venue or event.

Bonnie Lee Galea’s performances range from large corporate public & private events, weddings & festivals to intimate dining experiences & cocktail parties, wineries, golf clubs etc. Whether you are looking at this website in view of a band for your Wedding or a Party, maybe a Corporate Event or Function – possibly even with a theme, or for a Theatre Show, Festival or General Venue performance. You will find a few different selections here to choose from, as Bonnie will tailor her music & band to suit any of the above and also has four current shows tour ready – BESSIE BILLIE DINAH, YOU MUST REMEMBER THIS, Our Christmas Favourites & BLONDE BOMBShells OF JAZZ, available for Theatres locally, nationally or Internationally.

The Number of priests in the Parish has fallen sharply” !!
From our correspondent Ron Borg

Just recently I was talking to friends in Malta about the slump in priestly vocations, and their quick reply was “eh, in-numru ta qassisin fil-parocca taghna naqqu ha’na’! They were taken back when I started laughing at their remark and asked why I found it funny.

I told them that here in Adelaide, as in most of Australia, we have experienced an increase! An increase of parishes allotted to the one Parish Priest, in fact his car had to cover many hundreds of kilometres to try and keep up with the amount of parishioners spread over large areas, sometimes the Parish Priest, (like our ex-priest Bishop Charles Gauci) had to go across the waters to Kangaroo Island to tend to all his Parishes.

As if this was not bad enough, the Maltese Community of Adelaide, and also other Australian States, have come to experience a lack of one Maltese Chaplain. We in Adelaide had Fr. Gabriel Michallef who looked after us devoutly for 23 years, but now that he has retired back to his home NB; The Maltese Community Council of South Australia, the Consulate, the Maltese associations and many individuals showed their disappointment for leaving the community without a chaplain. Respective authorities were contacted to remedy the situation but so far no response has been received. We will keep you updated.

Japanese cultural activities in Gozo at the Citadel

The Gozo Japan Friendship event opened at the Citadel on Friday, and although the weather was not perfect, it did not dampen the spirits and the enjoyment of those who attended the different activities. Gozo Minister Dr Justyne Caruana visited the Citadel on Friday, where she joined in the traditional Tea Ceremony and was dressed in a traditional Kimono.

Dr Caruana said this weekend of Japanese cultural activities provides an experience “to know each other, learn from each other and work together.” Ms Akiko Miyahara – the festival organiser, explained that the aim of this special event is to make the public more familiar with Japanese culture.

Among the main attractions will be a variety of typical and traditional Japanese food and drink, information on the traditional clothing of Japan – the kimono, and old rituals, such as the Tea Ceremony. Thousands of lanterns light up Dazaifu Tenmangu Shrine, in southern Japan every autumn for the Jinko-shiki Festival, representing – the light of the ancient capital.

This tradition is also now seen in Gozo, with lanterns illuminating the ancient Gozo Citadel.
This unique event of culture fusions is taking place with the full collaboration of the Ministry for Gozo.

Whitehall Mansions is a five storey building located on the western shore of Msida Creek in Marsamxett harbour. The Irish Embassy shares the building with the British High Commission and the Embassies of Spain, Austria and The Netherlands. The building is perhaps best known locally as being the home of the Wrens (Women's Royal navy Auxiliary) after WWII to 1972. Msida Creek also served as the base for submarines operating out of Malta in WWII.

Historical links between Malta and Ireland

The links between Ireland and Malta are as varied as they are surprising.

In 1895 Cardinal Michael Logue, Primate of All Ireland, paid a short visit to Malta and was given a rousing welcome, so much so that the City of Floriana earned the nickname 'Tal Irish' ('The Irish') which has stuck to this day. On leaving Malta on the 17th of December, 1895, he was accompanied to the jetty by the Vilhena Band Club of Floriana and a great crowd. Cardinal Logue was so impressed by this show of affection that on arriving in Rome he intervened with the Vatican authorities to have the liturgy of the Feast of Saint Publius, Patron Saint of Floriana (and of Malta), elevated to 'first class'. As a sign of gratitude the Floriana parish commissioned a portrait of Cardinal Logue which today still graces the sacristy of the church of Saint Publius in Floriana.

In the summer of 1905 Floriana played a friendly match against the Royal Dublin Fusiliers at the Floriana Parade Ground. After the match which Floriana won 2-1, the Irishmen gave their green and white striped vests to Floriana who immediately adopted them as their new official colours which they play in to this day. Some historians contend that the nickname 'The Irish' was born at this stage. The Embassy is indebted to Mr Nigel Holland for his work in revealing the connections between Ireland and the city of Floriana.

The Irish have also played a role in Maltese politics. In the 1920's Doctor Michael Dundon from Patrickswell in Limerick led the Parliamentary Labour Party and was responsible for the Health portfolio.

A rather poignant story relates to the grave of a young Irishman in San Lawrenz. A 23 year old marine, Thomas McSweeney, originally from Kanturk was executed on HMS Rodney on 8th of June 1837. According to an article by Liam Collins in the Irish Independent of 6 February 2011 Thomas' grave is said to have miraculous properties and locals relate tales of a ghost sighting. Liam reports that Thomas' tomb had been maintained by devotees with flowers and candles being laid on a regular basis.
After Leaving 20 Years Ago to Further Career, This Marsa doctor sees a New Malta

Dr Antonella Berry-Brincat left her home town of Marsa at the turn of the millennium to pursue a career abroad. After 20 years working as an ophthalmologist in the UK, she attests to the importance of maintaining a link to Maltese communities abroad, and the home country they left years ago.

At first, she seems uneasy in front of the camera, perhaps reluctant to be in the public eye. Nevertheless, when the topic of her home country is brought into the conversation, her eyes immediately light up and her disquietude soon turns to passion, the type only visible when someone talks about love never-ending: a deep, heartfelt relationship that transcends time and distance.

“There is nothing like the warm and spontaneous attitude that’s part and parcel of the Maltese people,” Dr Antonella Berry-Brincat says. “The ability for a Maltese person to stop whatever they’re doing, meet someone outside, and have a coffee at a moment’s notice, is something nearly unheard of here in the UK, where the community and the people I interact with on a daily basis are perhaps more emotionally distant. There are obviously pros and cons to this, but it’s true when they say that absence makes the heart grow fonder,” she continues.

In Dr Antonella Berry-Brincat’s case, it’s her upbringing in Marsa, and her nostalgia about her home country, that still runs profound. When asked what she misses the most about her home country, the ophthalmologist is quick to answer: her husband would definitely go for the traditional “pastizzi”.

But how does she compare the Malta she left all those years ago, with the country of today? “Malta has indubitably changed in these past twenty years. Back when I graduated in 1997, and eventually left for the UK at the turn of the millennium, the number of opportunities available for students here in Malta, both from an academic perspective as well as the opportunity to make a career, was somewhat limited,” she says.

“Today, there is a large number of opportunities available for students here in Malta, where they are actively encouraged to advance in their respective field, study abroad, garner new skills and competences, and then import them back to Malta. Not just in the medical or ophthalmologic field, but also in other sectors as well,” she continues.

Berry-Brincat was in Malta as one of the delegates for the tenth annual meeting of the Council for the Maltese Living Abroad, under the chairmanship of the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Trade Promotion Carmelo Abela.

“We discussed several ways on how the Maltese community can remain in close contact with their country of origin. It is perhaps easier for me, who resides in the UK, then other expats and communities who loved in countries like Australia, Canada and the United States, which are not only geographically further away than the United Kingdom, but also have larger populations,” she points out. The advent of social media, according to Berry-Brincat, has also introduced a new element on how expats can remain in contact with Malta.

“In light of the advent of social media and other innovative tools of communication, such opportunities can be further exploited in order to reach these people. Specifically, those Maltese expats who are left out, and do not form part of their local Maltese community abroad,” she says.
“We need to make sure that these people remain part of the Maltese diaspora, and remain in contact with their country of origin. We need to do what we can to make their lives better and to make sure that Maltese expats integrate as much as possible with the local community of the country where they reside.”

“Nevertheless, we must never forget where we come from: our traditions and our roots make us who we are.” As a way to preserve such an outlook, Berry-Brincat suggests the use of social media to promote the use of the Maltese language, as well as other cultural aspects. “It’s imperative that whenever a Maltese person goes abroad, they do not forget what being Maltese actually entails. It is perhaps our obligation to teach what defines us as Maltese to our descendants, and to all of our future generations.”

WW2 SUBMARINE ‘URGE’ FOUND OFF MALTA

This is the wreck of wartime submarine HMS Urge – conclusively located and identified by marine archaeologists off Malta, solving a 77-year-long mystery.

Sitting defiantly upright on the seabed of the Mediterranean more than 400 feet down, her bow buried in the ocean floor, her deck gun facing forward, her hull encrusted with marine life, this is the last resting place of 44 souls.

The distinctive features of the U-class submarine have been compared with contemporary photographs and the undisclosed location of the wreck compared with official records to identify Urge.

HMS Urge, which was adopted by the people of Bridgend, is one of 19 U-class boats lost in World War 2, 13 of them in the Mediterranean. The submarines were small and originally meant to be used purely for training. They proved highly capable with Urge, under Lieutenant Commander Edward Tomkinson, regarded among the best in the 10th Submarine Flotilla, its crew and captain highly decorated for a string of successes, dispatching a German tanker supporting U-boat operations in the Atlantic, crippling the Italian battleship Vittorio Veneto at a time when the Royal Navy was sorely stretched in the Mediterranean, and sank the Italian cruiser Bande Nere during 20 patrols.

Contemporaries thought Tomkinson worthy of the Victoria Cross, while senior officers, led by the then head of the Silent Service, Admiral Sir Max Horton, reckoned he was as good a submariner as any who served in either world war.

Urge left the island on her final mission on April 27 1942 bound for Alexandria in Egypt as the 10th Submarine Flotilla moved its base to escape the Axis Powers’ constant bombing of Malta. Aboard were not just her 32 crew, but 11 other naval personnel and a war correspondent.

She never reached North Africa. The Admiralty concluded she ran into an enemy minefield shortly leaving the island, but the wreck was never found.

That official assessment of her loss was put into question by one shipwreck hunter, who claimed to have found the Urge off the Libyan coast near Tobruk – far from her intended route – and supposedly sunk by Italian aircraft two days after departing Malta.

That fate – and location – has now been definitively ruled out thanks to the combined efforts of Canadian naval researcher Platon Alexiades, Francis Dickinson – grandson of Urge’s commanding officer – and Professor Timmy Gambin of the University of Malta’s Classics and Archaeology Department and a team of students, plus the Royal Navy’s official historians.

Their deep sea research confirms the original Admiralty estimate – the boat did indeed succumb to a mine laid by a German E-boat; the impact caused catastrophic damage and led to Urge plunging out of control to the seabed.

Rain, the horror! Parents divided over postponing Halloween due to bad weather

Joe Scerri used to tease Mary Borg about her boyfriend, a handsome young buck with a motorcycle. But what, Joe would ask, was a motorcycle in comparison to what he and Mary could be as a couple if she would just do what her heart was truly telling her to do and pick him instead?

Then, one day, she did.
“I picked a good one,” says Mary, patting Joe’s arm.
They were married in September 1958 near their family homes in Rabat, Malta. Two months later, they were on a boat to Canada. Joe’s older brother, Paul, was living in Toronto, three blocks from where Joe and Mary live now on Clendenan Avenue, in the neighbourhood around Dundas Street West known as The Junction.
The newlyweds were down to their “last dime,” when Mary found a job making auto parts. Joe caught on as a house painter and took a second job at Canada Packers, a meat-processing plant in what, at the time, was a sprawling acreage of feedlots and abattoirs along St. Clair Avenue, employing thousands of immigrants.

Peter J. Thompson/National Post

The Scerris worked and saved and, in 1963, bought their house. Mary didn’t even need to go inside to know it was the right one for them.

“I loved it from the minute I saw it,” she says. It cost $17,000, a sum the couple recently recouped many times over when they sold the four-bedroom property for $870,000. Moving day is Aug. 27.

“When they come for the last piece of furniture, I am going to cry,” Joe says. “We raised two kids here. But my knees are getting bad and the house is too big for us, and sometimes that is life. Sometimes you have to do what you don’t always want to do.”

When we speak of Toronto’s red-hot housing market what we typically talk about is price. Bidding wars and bully offers and benchmarks and bubbles and neighbours, exchanging juicy gossip about another house being sold for another insane sum. And the sums are insane. A detached home in the old city of Toronto costs $1-million on average.

But there is more to the market than money. There are the people, like Joe and Mary. When they move, they will be taking 50-plus years of community memory with them. It is a precious resource, a local, living history whose loss must be counted among the hidden costs of a sales boom and a neighbourhood in transition. The Junction is shifting from blue collar to white. It is out with the old Joes, and all they know of this place and its past, and in with the new Joes, like me.

Peter J. Thompson/National Post

I met Joe a few years ago. He was impossible to miss. He sits on his front porch most mornings, sipping coffee, reading a paper and waving to the kids on their way to school, including my daughter, whom he calls “Princess.”

I recently sat down in the Scerris kitchen to speak with them about the move and their memories. A pot of peeled potatoes was on the stove. Joe is the family cook.

The first thing they did when they got the keys from their lawyer in 1963 was renovate — smashing down a wall, putting in new doors and floors, and painting. They did everything themselves.

“I would be screwing in the drywall, while Mary would be following me with the vacuum,” Joe says. It took five years to pay off the house, with Joe juggling two jobs. He quit painting soon after, but remained at Canada Packers until the early 1990s, when the stockyards closed, tossing thousands out of work.

But Dundas was already different by then. When Mary and Joe first moved in, the strip was buzzing with retail. Tailors, dressmakers, department stores, butchers and grocers and diners, such as Coney Island, whose owner was Maltese. If a customer couldn’t pay, he would feed them anyway.

Peter J. Thompson/National Post

“He was a good man,” Joe says. People went shopping in their finest clothes. Parcels were wrapped. Greetings were exchanged. There was even a local movie theatre, The Beaver.

“We would see old shows,” says Mary. She loved the romances. Joe preferred westerns.

Over time, the bustle of Dundas died away, killed by the car and the rise of mall culture. Industries rooted in the area for decades left or else went out of business. Heintzman pianos, CCM, the meat-packing giants, all are gone.

“Dundas is all coffee shops now,” says Mary. Well, it is not all coffee shops. There are new restaurants, antique dealers, a gourmet meat shop, ice-cream parlours and, overall, a gentrifying thrum — Starbucks arrived in 2010 — along with some relics from an earlier age, including a shoe repair joint run by an old timer, who apparently makes up the prices as he goes along.

We move to the Scerris living room to look through some old photo albums. Joe pauses on a picture of Mary.

“I just hope they take good care of our house,” he says. Mary is dark-haired, olive-skinned and petite. A cigarette is dangling from her fingers. She is wearing a coat with a fur collar and high heels. She looks like a movie star.

Peter J. Thompson/National Post

“Now we are old,” says Joe, leafing through more photos, pointing at faces and explaining how he died of this and she died of that. Many of the neighbours they once knew on Clendenan Avenue — Italians, Macedonians, Maltese — are gone.

But change, says Mary, isn’t necessarily bad.

“We didn’t have any kids on the street for about five years,” she says. “Now there are lots of kids.”

The Scerris step out front of the house they have lived in for 52 years. Joe looks at Mary, teases: “I think she is going to kiss me.” “Joseph,” she scolds, before smooching him on the cheek. Mary won’t be returning to Clendenan to check up on the new owners — a young couple with no kids — after the move.

“We have too many memories here,” she says. “I just hope they take good care of our house.”

Their new house is a two-bedroom bungalow a five-minute drive away. It needs some work.

“It doesn’t have a porch,” Joe says. “So the first thing I am going to do is build a porch with just enough room for a small table and two chairs.”

Andy Busuttil’s Skorba Music Team arrives in Victoria next week. We need some Victorian support for the Centru Malti’s MCCV production of The Great Siege 1565. The narrative, by Marlene Ebejer (ex-SBS), is in English. You do not need to be able to speak Maltese to follow this superb production. It is the best and most authentic audiovisual programme produced by the Maltese community in the 44 years I have been in Australia. Its launch at La Vallette earlier in the year with Marisa Previtera as narrator was very well received.

This is a seriously professional production not to be missed by anyone interested in original music scores, a thoroughly 16th Century historical narrative, some great visuals and authentic Maltese and Turkish musical instruments. A fun night for family and friends.

Malta is on course for a record-breaking year for tourism. The number of visitors coming to Malta increased in September to 287,461. That’s a rise of around 3 per cent. The National Statistics Office in Valletta said tourist arrivals from the EU went up by 5.6 per cent when compared to the same month last year. Most holidaymakers to Malta were aged between 25 and 44. Total tourist spending was estimated at €257 million, an increase of nearly 6 per cent over the corresponding month in 2018. Total nights spent went up by 2.1% when compared to September 2018, reaching nearly 2.1 million nights, meaning hotels in popular destinations such as St Julian’s, Sliema, Qawra and Mellieha are likely to enjoy a record year.

January-September 2019 The latest figures showed that more than 2.1 million tourists have visited the Maltese Islands in the first nine months of 2019. That’s an increase of 4.8 per cent over the same period last year. Total tourism expenditure was estimated at almost €1.8 billion, 4.2 per cent higher than that recorded for 2018.

History of salt making in Malta and Gozo unveiled in new publication

New documents have been unveiled in a publication on the history of salt making in Malta, which presents a new history on the 40 salt pans which are located in different parts of Malta, Gozo and Comino. There are 27 salt pans around Malta, 11 salt pans in Gozo and two salt pans in Comino.

Salt production was one of the main industries across the Maltese islands for hundreds of years. It reached its apex during the rule of the Knights of St John when Maltese salt was exported across the European continent and was appreciated for its quality and taste.

She remarked that, “most salt pans portray exceptional hard work and are still in good condition. I hope this publication creates a greater understanding of the salt-works tradition, the salt pans system of the Maltese islands and their significance as part of Malta's impressive and cultural heritage.”

The book launch took place at the Salini Salt Pans, the largest system of salt pans across the Maltese islands, which were designed by the engineers of the Knights of the Order of St John.

The author said that today Maltese salt should be exploited both for the culinary use and cultural tourism purposes.

This 277 page publication is illustrated with original designs and pictures of the various salt pans on the coast of the Maltese archipelago.

Visually impaired persons will have their own special passport

Report: Keith Demicoli

Visually impaired persons are to have their own type identification passport following Identity Malta's development of a new system that works with the QR Code enabling them to be scanned by a mobile. Parliamentary Secretary for Citizenship Julia Farrugia Portelli said this is the first kind of such a development in Europe and she hoped that other countries will begin using the technology to enable more social inclusion.

Joseph Vella, one of about 5,000 persons in Malta suffering visual impairment, will be able to access passport details in a more independent and private manner through the utilisation of the QR Code via a sticker that will be attached to the passport and will be read by an app (speech code) that can be downloaded free of charge.

PS Farrugia Portelli said this initiative places Malta among the first European countries to offer such a service. No other country except Portugal has such a facility which she said will enable greater social inclusion on a European scale.

The Parliamentary Secretary for the Rights of Disabled Persons, Anthony Agius Decelis, said this is a further development to spread greater inclusion and described this as another step to break down barriers and induce greater inclusion in society.

Michael Micallef, who also suffers visual impairment, said this innovative tool opens the road to the provision of greater accessibility. He said such a system may in the short-term future also be used on books, CDs and other products to help individuals use the same app to obtain greater information.

Oh Yes He Is! Panto veteran Alan Montanaro is back

MADC's festive panto Aladdin will see Alan Montanaro return as scriptwriter and hilariously colourful Dame.

Montanaro has not only penned the script for this year’s offering – the fantastical Arabian Nights spectacular Aladdin – but he also returns to the stage in the show as the larger-than-life panto Dame. Photos credit: Sebio Aquilina

“We are thrilled to be welcoming Alan back to panto this year with Aladdin,” says the show’s director, Michael Mangion. “With his many years of panto experience and, of course, his trademark comedic flair, Alan is sure to help make Aladdin the side-splittingly funny and magical adventure that we’ve all come to expect from MADC’s annual pantos.”

Montanaro has indeed penned a family-friendly escapade that promises to take the audience on an enchanted trip to the Orient, with lighting, stage sets and effects sure to take the breath away. The story follows the poor young Aladdin as he goes on an intricate journey involving spirits and genies, magic rings and lamps, wishes and wonder, with, of course, plenty of exciting music, dancing, drama, and fun.

Joining Montanaro on stage in the stellar production will be a cast of more than 30 actors and dancers, including Stephen Oliver, John Montanaro, Alexander Gatesy Lewis, Jasmine Farrugia, Noel Zarb, Joseph Pavia, Karl Bartolo and Matthew Manfre. While fellow panto stalwart – and former Dame – Michael Mangion will be directing, the show will be choreographed by Francesco Nicodeme, with musical director Ryan Abela, and lavish costumes designed by Isabel Warrington.

There are limited shows so book early.

MADC’s Aladdin will be performed at the MFCC, Ta’ Qali on the 23rd, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th December 2019 and 3rd and 4th January 2020 at 7.30 pm, with matinee performances at 3.00 pm on the 26th, 28th, 29th December 2019 and 4th January 2020.

Hospital Camp Floriana during World War I

During World War One 27 hospitals and camps were set up in Malta including one in Floriana (banner photo). The first group of 600 ANZACS casualties from the Gallipoli landings of 25 April 1915 arrived in Malta on 4 May. By the end of the year Malta had treated 2,550 officers and 55,400 other ranks from the Gallipoli Expeditionary Force, the maximum number in hospital on any one day being 16,004. (Currently Mater Dei Hospital hosts an average of 1000 patients a day). In October 1915, a combined Franco-British force was landed at Salonika to assist Serbia in its war against Bulgaria. From Salonika came 2,600 officers, including members of the nursing services. Up to 64,500 other ranks were received at the hospitals of Malta up to August 1917.

Malta is a Southern European island nation in the Mediterranean, off the coast of Sicily (Italy) and close to Tunisia and Libya. The small country is home to a population of roughly 440,000 people.

Malta belonged to the British empire from 1814 from 1964. During that time, the British imposed the use of English as an official language. And it still is, alongside Maltese: Roughly 90% of the population speak English, and Malta is a popular destination for students seeking English language courses. The two major universities in Malta are

The University of Malta and the Malta College of Arts, Science and Technology (MCAST). Both offer a range of Bachelor and Master programmes in English. Middlesex University also operates a branch campus on Malta (Middlesex University Malta), where they offer a range of degree programmes focusing on IT / Computer Science as well as International Business. https://www.study.eu/country/malta
MALTA PUBLIC TRANSPORT LAUNCHES NEW TALLINJA BIKES
By Bay News

Malta’s main bus operator has launched a new bicycle hire service that’s almost identical to London’s ‘Boris Bikes’ scheme. Malta Public Transport has installed a bicycle stations in Valletta and the University of Malta, making it easier for students to commute between the capital and university. Car parking has become a big issue on the university campus, but the easy-to-use Tallinja Bikes offer a convenient and affordable solution for students. The scheme works in exactly the same way as the ‘Boris Bikes’ in London. Users set up a one-time registration at the station itself and can then unlock a bike and dock it back when they reach their destination.

Tallinja Bikes manager Ignacio Munoz told 89.7 Bay: ‘The introduction of Tallinja Bike is not only a practical measure to ease traffic congestion in and around the University of Malta. ‘It is also a clear signal by Malta Public Transport that it is committed to invest in new eco-sustainable solutions.’

The university Tallinja Bike station is the first extension of the service outside Valletta. Other stations are located at the Valletta Bus Terminus, the Barrakka Lift, Valletta Waterfront, Fort St Elmo, Marsamxett Ferry Terminal and the Floriana Park and Ride. Malta Public Transport is currently offering a 50 percent discount to students paying with their Tallinja Card.
